KEY RISKS AND RISK MANAGEMENT

The client should not invest in this Fund if the client does not understand or is not comfortable with the accompanying risks.

- Interest Rate Risk. This is the possibility for an investor to experience losses due to changes in interest rates. The purchase and sale of a debt instrument may result in profit or loss because the value of a debt instrument changes inversely with prevailing interest rates.
- Liquidity Risk. This is the possibility for an investor to experience losses due to the inability to sell or convert assets into cash immediately or in instances where conversion to cash is possible but at a loss. These may be caused by different reasons such as trading in securities with small or few outstanding issues, absence of buyers, limited buy/sell activity or underdeveloped capital market.
- Credit/Default Risk. This is the possibility for an investor to experience losses due to a borrower's failure to pay principal and/or interest in a timely manner on instruments such as bonds, loans or other forms of security which the borrower issued. It also includes risk on a counterparty (a party the Trustee trades with) defaulting on a contract to deliver its obligation either in cash or securities.
- Reinvestment Risk. This is the possibility for an investor to have lower returns or earnings when maturing funds or the interest earnings of funds are reinvested.

The Trustee only transacts with reputable counterparties which have undergone a rigorous accreditation and evaluation process. Regulatory exposure limits as well as the Fund's average duration are monitored regularly to ensure that exposures are managed. The Fund also undergoes an annual review to ensure that it is equipped to fund any redemption requirement in a timely manner and at a reasonable cost during times of financial stress.

OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

In March, US Treasury yields declined versus previous month, reversing the surge in February, as market expected the US Federal Reserve (Fed) to consider an interest rate policy pause amidst financial market turmoil ignited by regional bank failures and cooling inflation. Month-on-month, US Treasury yields declined by 32 basis points (bps) across the curve. The benchmark 10-year and 2-year US Treasury Notes fell by 44 bps and 75 bps, respectively, with the 2-year Note yielding 4.06%, and the 10-year Note yielding 3.48%. This brought the 2y10y spread to turn less negative compared to previous month, from -89 bps in February to -58 bps in March. In line with the movement in US Treasury yields, yields on ROPs also decreased, with the yield of the 2-year ROP declining by 21 bps to 4.37% and the yield of the 10-year ROP down by 40 bps to 4.77%.

The dip in US bond yields occurred despite the market-expected policy rate hike by the US Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) in March. The FOMC raised the federal funds rate by 25 bps and maintained its target terminal rate of 5 to 5.25% for 2023 based on the dot plot released. Officials have reiterated that their focus remains on bringing back inflation to target and will continue to adjust policy rates based on current data. As for inflation, the personal consumption expenditure (PCE) index, which is the Fed's preferred gauge, slowed to 5.0% year-on-year in February, lower than the previous month's 5.3%. Core PCE, which excludes volatile food and energy prices, also cooled to 4.6% annually, which came out slightly lower than the expected 4.7%, supporting the outlook that the Fed's efforts to tame inflation is kicking in, but still in a sluggish motion.

Furthermore, other macroeconomic data reports released in March still point to a question as to whether a policy pause is due to come. Initial jobless claims rose more than expected at 198K from previous week's 191K. However, given the tight labor market condition, this is still seen falling short of the target rise in unemployment rate for this year at 4.5% from the current 3.6% level. Meanwhile, the US consumer confidence index rose in March to 104.2, breaking expectations of a continued decline. This topped the previous month's 103.4, and the forecast median of 101.0, indicating that consumers are becoming less pessimistic on current market conditions. Furthermore, pending home sales continued to expand in February as it posted a 0.8% month-on-month growth to 83.2 following the improvement on mortgage rates. The National Association of Realtors (NAR) Chief Economist Lawrence Yun believes that the housing sector's contraction is already coming to an end.

Looking ahead, it is likely that US Treasury yields will continue to trade sideways as inflation still remains elevated and as market awaits for further data to evidence that inflation is on a downtrend. With inflation still well above target, the Fed is expected to maintain its current policy direction as officials have stated that they remain focused on managing inflation despite the banking turmoil in the US.
